

Even after recovering from COVID-19, and without any other underlying conditions, some people may experience persistent or new symptoms that they did not have before their infection.